Road could span Utah Lake

The dotted line (right) represents the projected place for the planned causeway across Utah Lake (left). The projected highway would connect Orem and Provo to Eagle Mountain on the west side of Utah Lake.

It was not a mind-blinding epiphany, or any sort of revelation.

To county engineer Clyde Naylor, the idea to put a causeway across Utah Lake just made sense.

It came to him 10 years ago while studying the uses of Utah Lake. Even then, local traffic was quickly becoming a problem, and a causeway seemed the perfect way to funnel Utah Valley's growth crush.

"Right now, we're totally congested because there's so little space between the lake and the mountains," Naylor said.

Naylor's idea was lauded by some and laughed at by the rest.

"There were people who thought it would be a good idea and other people who thought it was wild and out of place," he said.

But after a decade, the causeway cause has all but lost its following, and Naylor is left with his futuristic fantasy.

"I think it's just theoretical," Provo manager Robert Stockwell said.

"I don't forsee anyone in Provo trying to push this through," said Jason Bench, Provo's project planner.

"It hasn't been something we've really discussed seriously," said Kristin Thompson, manager of development and community relations for Envision Utah, a public/private planning group.

And Naylor, too, said his plan is on the backburner — a curious place for an issue that could play into the latest craze to populate the west side of the lake.

Eagle Mountain was born just west of Lehi in December 1996, and Saratoga Springs followed one year later a few miles south on the northwest edge of Utah Lake.

Since then, the communities have exploded.

Eagle Mountain had 148 residents in 1997. This year, Mountain Land Association estimates it will have 2,144.

Saratoga Springs had 175 in 1997, and is estimated to have as many as 1,221 this year.

Then there's Mosida Orchards, a new development further south on the lake that has sold nearly half of its 80 9.5-acre lots.

"They've already proven very viable," Naylor said.

Maybe, but Stockwell said no one has pushed for a causeway.

And Provo is not going to promote such a plan unless it wants to annex the communities west of the lake as its own.

"It would make no sense to build a causeway to other cities," Stockwell said.

Naylor figures a causeway — which would likely span the five miles between the Provo-Orem border and Pelican Point — is 10-15 years off for several reasons:

Legacy Highway

Without a major highway vein running along the west side of Utah Lake, future high-density development is practically impossible — making a causeway meaningless.

Enter Legacy Highway.

Although the proposed freeway's plans show the highway running along the west edge of Davis County, skirting the Great Salt Lake as it heads to I-215, Naylor envisions it extending down the Wasatch Front, west of Utah Lake, to Nephi.

"It probably won't happen until Legacy Highway goes through," he said. "There needs to be something to generate it."

Money

Even more important to generating such a project might be money.

"The cost would be huge," Stockwell said. "You're talking megabucks to build."

Stockwell said the city's 10-year master plan for roads will cost $41 million — and that's just for streets within the current city limits.

Naylor estimates the road could cost as much as $150 million.

"Economically, I don't know of anyone who would front the money," Bench said.

A bond measure or added taxes would not be needed if the causeway were made a toll road, Naylor said.

Environment

Then there's the issue of preserving wetlands and the lake's June sucker fish.

"It would take years and years to go through the environmental issues," Stockwell said.

Provo is already wrestling with the South Campus Area Master Plan and the Airport Master Plan, a causeway becomes a frivolous issue, Stockwell said.

"We have a lot of other priorities first," Stockwell said.

Lehi gets statue of Rockwell

Spectators gather for the unveiling of the new statue of Orrin Porter Rockwell at the Lehi City Building on Saturday. Rockwell is a famed early member of the LDS Church.

Orrin Porter Rockwell lived an exciting and often controversial life.

This weekend the city of Lehi honored Rockwell, an important figure in the early history of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Former Lehi resident Stanley Wanlass' bronze sculpture of Rockwell was unveiled in front of the Lehi City Building on Saturday at 4 p.m.

Eventually, the statue will be moved one block west of city building to a permanent location in Lehi's Heritage Park.

"The place where the monument goes was where his home was in Lehi in the late 1850s and early 1860s," John Rockwell, of the Lehi Historical Preservation Commission, said.

"I've always been interested in Porter Rockwell," Wanlass said. "Back when I was a graduate student at BYU, I did a bust of Porter Rockwell in stone."

According to Wanlass, that bust won a Brockbank award and is in the university's private collection.

Lehi's project to commemorate Rockwell has been underway for nearly three years. Wanlass spent the better part of two years actually creating the monument.

Roughly a quarter of the work Wanlass did for the statue was research on his subject.

He said while he has a mostly positive feeling for Rockwell, many other people do not.

"Rockwell was such a controversial person. To some people he was almost an angel, and to others he was a devil. Everything that I did had to be pretty subjective," Wanlass said.

According to Richard Lloyd Dewey's "Porter Rockwell; a Biography," Rockwell was accused of the attempted assassination of Missouri Governor Lilburn W. Boggs in 1842.

For this, as well as his heavy-handed method of law enforcement on the frontier, Rockwell earned notoriety as "The Destroying Angel."

On the other hand, as Wanlass said, Rockwell played a significant, positive role in early local and church history.

Identity important, Elder Nelson says

By Erin Kingrey

NewsNet Staff Writer

Elder Russell M. Nelson of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints discussed the interrelationship among identity, priority and blessings at the Church Education System fireside Sunday night at the Marriott Center.

Elder Nelson said understanding these principles would help people overcome life's challenges.

"I want you to prepare for life — eternal life," challenged Elder Nelson. "Without sure identity and priority, blessings that matter most are at the mercy of things that matter least."

Elder Nelson emphasized the importance spouses must place upon supporting each other in their marriages. He said the highest priority and calling husbands and wives have is to love each other.

Elder Nelson specifically addressed the young women, urging them to sustain their husbands, to learn the doctrines of the gospel, teach them to their children and to become educated.

The brethren of the church would not succeed, Elder Nelson said, if the sisters failed in their devotion and responsibilities.

Elder Nelson said he anticipated that in the judgment interviews after this life, the vital subject would not be career choices or even church callings. Rather, accountability as spouses and parents would take precedence.

He told the young adults that "you work to sustain life; you don't live to sustain work."

ELDER RUSSELL M. NELSON

Elder Nelson said he recommended determining priorities by asking, "'What do I really want, most of all?' and then comparing the answer with the will of the Lord to seek first the kingdom of God."

Organizing priorities well requires a deep understanding of identity, he said.

Baptized members of the church need to remember their own identity as disciples of Christ who have taken his name upon them.

This covenant is both internal and external, made manifest in the ordinance of the sacrament, Elder Nelson said.

He said that when a person takes the sacrament into his or her body, it becomes a part of that person's identity.

Elder Nelson said identity is discovered by remembering that everyone is a child of God and by searching the scriptures.

As these two principles of

OPEC increases crude oil production

VIENNA, Austria — OPEC, facing mounting international pressure to pump more oil to stem surging fuel prices, agreed Sunday to boost the group's official output of crude by 800,000 barrels a day.

Analysts cautioned that the increase, which was roughly in line with what many had predicted, will not do much to roll back prices because OPEC members already are producing at least 700,000 barrels above their current quotas.

The decision was reached after four hours of informal talks in Vienna among members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

The new quota will take effect Oct. 1, and OPEC members agreed to meet again Nov. 12 to reassess market conditions and, if necessary, adjust output.

Broadway's longest running play ends

NEW YORK — "Now and forever" is here and gone.

"Cats," Broadway's longest running show, hung up its whiskers, tails and toe shoes Sunday after nearly 18 years and a record 7,485 performances.

It was an emotional weekend at the Winter Garden Theater, starting with the Saturday matinee where the audience included alumni from the musical's Broadway and touring productions.

The Saturday evening performance was a special benefit for the Actors' Fund, the theater service organization that takes care of entertainment professionals. And the final performance Sunday was by invitation only.

"Cats," which has music by Andrew Lloyd Webber, is based on "Old Possum's Book of Practical Cats," a collection of poems by T.S. Eliot, who even though he died in 1965, received a Tony Award 18 years later for his contributions to the score.

Congress focuses on 11 spending bills

WASHINGTON — So little time, so many bills. And so many, many disputes.

With just 19 working days left until Congress' scheduled Oct. 6 adjournment, lawmakers must complete 11 spending bills for the coming fiscal year before they can go home for the elections.

Roughly $20 billion separates Republicans from President Clinton. But in this era of federal surpluses, fierce policy disputes over hiring teachers, standards for drunken driving and other issues probably will prove to be the toughest hurdles.

"Our problem is language this year, not money," said Senate Appropriations Committee Chair Ted Stevens, R-Alaska.

However, on CNN's "Late Edition," Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., cited "all kinds of efforts to stop us passing appropriation bills."

The 13 annual spending bills for fiscal 2001, which begins Oct. 1, directly control about one-third of the $1.8 trillion budget, or more than $600 billion.

Hong Kong lacks democracy in votes

HONG KONG — Amid gripes about Hong Kong's unpopular leader and the lack of full democracy, citizens and special interests chose a new legislature Sunday that critics say will be unduly dominated by pro-Beijing forces and big business.

Chief Executive Tung Chee-hwa was not even on the ballot but came under harsh attack from voters who accuse him of bungling the governance of Hong Kong in the three years since it returned from British to Chinese sovereignty.

Ordinary citizens were able to vote for just 24 of the 60 Legislative Council seats — and exit polling conducted for television ATV showed pro-democracy candidates were expected to win two-thirds of those seats.

Special interest groups — such as business leaders, lawyers and doctors — picked 30 candidates in a system that gives them much more voice than average citizens.

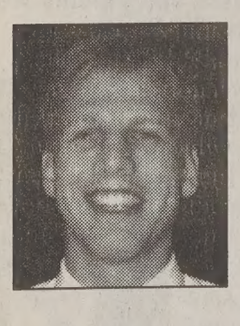
Scripture of the Day



"He that findeth his life shall lose it: and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it."

John Kingrey, a senior from Dayton, Ohio, majoring in psychology, said he likes this scripture because "the Lord provides you with purpose and direction as you immerse yourself in the needs of others."

Study: Airport is not international enough

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — It may be Utah's largest, but Salt Lake City International Airport is not international enough, consultants say.

With just three flights a day to Calgary and one to Vancouver, the international terminal is virtually always empty. The airport is also the largest in the United States — ranked 23rd in total passengers — without at least one regularly scheduled, nonstop overseas flight.

But a recent study commissioned by the airport and renewed efforts by the local air-travel community could soon help the airport become a bustling hub.

The report, produced by air-industry consultants SH&E of Boston, encourages Salt Lake officials to actively recruit international service. It recommends working with Delta Air Lines, which controls 75 percent of Salt Lake's air traffic along with regional partner SkyWest, and its new partners, Air France, Korean Air and AeroMexico.

Consultants also urge officials to emphasize the city's geographic position; capitalize on the success of other cities that have added nonstop international service; garner support from business people that would benefit from the flights, and use the upcoming 2002 Winter Games to make a name for Salt Lake City.

However, Atlanta-based Delta has in recent years reorganized its international travel, confining it mainly to three hubs, Atlanta, Cincinnati and New York (JFK).

"I think Salt Lake is going to have to live in that shadow of Atlanta and Cincinnati as long as Delta is here," said James Thalman, corporate travel manager for Franklin Covey Co. and program chair of the newly formed Utah Business Travel Association.

Salt Lake officials are therefore negotiating with Air France and AeroMexico for service Delta seems unwilling to provide.

Buzz Hunt, Salt Lake International Airport's marketing director, is scheduled to discuss plans for a nonstop Paris-Salt Lake City flight with Air France officials in Paris on Sept. 21.

Hunt also will meet with a handful of other airline representatives at an Amsterdam conference Sept. 18-19. He is optimistic Salt Lake City will have an international nonstop flight to somewhere other than western Canada within the next five years.

"I think part of it is going to be dependent upon Delta improving their profit performance out of Salt Lake, and I'm confident that will occur," Hunt said. "Assuming it does occur, I think either Delta or one of the Delta partners will initiate that service, and I think AeroMexico and Air France will probably be the first to do so."

Unified flag will unite Koreas at Olympics

Associated Press

SYDNEY, Australia — Athletes from North and South Korea will march together behind a unification flag during opening ceremonies at the Olympics — the first time the countries of the divided peninsula have joined together at the games.

International Olympic Committee president Juan Antonio Samaranch announced the agreement for the joint march Sunday night during a speech at the Sydney Opera House opening the IOC's annual meeting.

"It's a very important gesture to show to all the world the will of the two Koreas to be unified as soon as possible," Samaranch said at a news conference.

Samaranch said there would be 180 marchers in all, 90 from each country. The North Koreans were concerned their team, numbering around 50 athletes, would barely be noticed among the 400-strong South Korean team.

They will march behind one flag held by two athletes, one from the North and one from the South, Samaranch said, with uniform details still to be worked out between the two nations. The team name in the march will be simply Korea.

The athletes will wear the same uniforms for Friday's opening ceremony; during the games, however, they will compete as separate countries, with their own uniforms, flags and anthems, Olympic officials said.

Samaranch said that he personally brokered the deal during negotiations stretching over five days in Sydney, with the IOC's executive then approving it. After the announcement, he posed for photos standing between IOC members from the countries, Kim Un-yong from the South and Chang Ung from the North.

"We are the same blood," Chang said.

Kim said the flag depicted a map of the entire Korean peninsula and was used when the Koreas fielded joint teams at the World Table Tennis Championships in Chiba, Japan, 10 years ago and at the World Youth Soccer Championship in Lisbon in 1991.

"It's a very, very powerful symbol," IOC executive board member Anita DeFrantz of the United States said. "I think it might bring a lot of people to tears on the 15th of September."

"I think this is very good news for sport, for the Olympic family and also for the games of Sydney," Samaranch said.

Chang said the entire North Korean delegation totaled 70, and could not say how that would affect the number of people who marched.

The Koreas remain technically in a state of war because their three-year conflict in the early 1950s ended in an armistice, not a peace treaty.

identity and priority are preserved and honored in individual lives, Elder Nelson said he promised that blessings would flow.

"You can lay claim to all the blessings of the Abrahamic covenant, destined to be fulfilled in these latter days," he said.

Elder Nelson said he anticipated that a quarter of a million young adults participated in the fireside.

Several notable church authorities were in attendance. Elder Henry B. Eyring of the Quorum of the Twelve, BYU President Merrill J. Bateman of the Seventy, and Elder Richard K. Cline of the Seventy, were all present for the fireside.

not look favorably on money defacement, and trackers often mark bills with the address of the site to increase the probability that somebody else will enter it.

The site sold stamps at one point, but stopped after complaints from the secret service, Eskin said in the frequently asked questions section of the site.

According to the Federal Bureau of Engraving and Printing fact page, defacement of currency is defined as "defacement with intent to render such items unfit to be reissued."

But technically writing on bills is legal unless it causes mutilation or damage, and in the chat room at Where's George, avid users discuss the intricacies of bill marking.

One user, whose online name is Frank, offered about 15 suggestion for what to write when marking bills including, "Enter, mark, spend. Track this bill's journey."

Frank said people use different colors and sizes of stamps.

"Some people like to use two different stamps: one for the front of bills, and a different one for the back," he said.

Frank said he has entered 648 bills and has had 58 bills receive hits.

For people like Frank, tracking is serious business despite the fact that there are no monetary awards involved in tracking.

There are no extrinsic rewards of tracking on Where's George besides the ego boost of being placed on the top ten list for having the most hits.

In the frequently asked question section, Eskin explains that the site "exists for fun because it has not been done yet. The point of Where's George is not to make money or collect email addresses, it is to have fun tracking your dollar bills."

The idea of tracking money is not new, but usually it is a radio station that runs a money-tracking contest to increase listeners.

Star 102.7 in Salt Lake City recently ran a contest in which a million dollars was offered to whoever could find a bill with a certain serial number.

Mike Nelson, an afternoon air personality at Star, said there was a big response from people looking for the bill.

He said the location of where the bill was spent was not announced, but that people had two to three months to find it.

"Nobody ever presented the bill," he said, "but one lady was only one digit off, and one person presented a bill that had 102.7 in the serial number sequence."

He said the odds of someone finding the number was phenomenal, but he said once people caught onto the concept, they had a lot of fun with it.

"One guy had a serial number that was straight sevens he had held on to for 10 years," Nelson said.

Nelson said similar radio contests have been done many times in different cities, but he said the Where's George site is doing some pioneering.

The only problem with Where's George, he said, is that not everybody has and uses the Internet faithfully.

Perhaps it is the fact that the chances are so low of getting a hit, which intrigues users and makes getting a hit so rewarding.

Or perhaps it is the stories — because despite the fact that the average life span of a dollar bill is shortened by wear, a lot can happen in that time. And in the larger scheme of things, money changes throughout time and can tell a lot about a culture.

County Task Force cuts into local crime

By Emma Barrett
emma@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

The 22 police officers on the Utah County Major Crimes Task Force may not show up to work at 8 every morning, but they are experts at what they do.

Since the Task Force was created in July of 1997, Utah County police have seen an increase in the number of gang-related arrests made in Utah County.

"Our gang problems have definitely gone down," said program director Lt. Steve Clark.

Clark said the idea to establish a countywide task force came because of the nature of gang- and narcotics-related criminal activity.

"Criminals know no boundaries ... yet police departments do," Clark said.

Sgt. Gordon Smith said the task force targets gangs and narcotics simultaneously because they are usually found together.

"The vast majority of drugs are controlled by gangs and vice versa," Smith said.

Clark said officers work "whenever we have something going down."

Most officers do not come in during the morning but work late into the night following up on tips and making contacts.

Smith said officers get most of their information from other narcotics and gang offenders and from anonymous tips.

Often, someone brought in on a minor charge will give information about a bigger crime in return for a lighter sentence, Clark said.

Another vital source of information for the task force comes in the form of anonymous calls from residents who notice suspicious activity.

"I would say of the tips that come in, 75 percent of them we score on," Smith said. "They know it won't come back to bite them because it is anonymous."

Smith said the success of the task force is because of the way they approach their work.

He said the task force operates under the idea of the career criminal.

"Eighty percent of the crime is committed by 20 percent of the people," Smith said.

He said the task force knows who is involved in drugs and gang-related activities, and they keep an eye on these people rather than just waiting for something to happen.

"We bring most of our targets into custody within 48 hours," Smith said.

Smith also said the task force keeps busy with activities like filling search warrants and busting drug labs.

"On average, we serve a search warrant every day we come into work," Smith said. "That's someone's door getting kicked in every day."

Smith also said the task force is able to discover and dismantle more drug labs than individual police departments did before its creation.

Questions about Ricks answered

By Michael Davies
davies@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Ricks College's alumni, faculty and students might feel anxious about the transition of Ricks into a four-year university. But the effects of the BYU-Idaho announcement are still a few years away.

"As of right now it's still Ricks," said Fred Skousen, president of advancement at BYU.

According to Skousen, before Ricks can become a four-year university it must first go through a self-evaluation and accreditation.

The administration must decide what changes have to be made before Ricks can handle the changes in enrollment and curriculum.

The announcement by the first presidency of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and the Ricks Board of Trustees represents a direction, not an immediate transformation. The decision has been made to begin the process, but nothing has changed yet.

According to Ricks College, there are 139 courses of study, most of which lead to an associate's degree or similar two-year degree. The school is expected to turn about 40 of those into four-year bachelor's degree programs much like BYU's.

"This decision gives more opportunities to students who want the Rick/BYU experience," Skousen said.

The transition of Ricks into a four-year university should not affect the student bodies of BYU or Ricks in the near future. Even after the changes occur, many students may chose to use Ricks/BYU-Idaho as a starting point in their schooling.

Students take care of 3 GEs in new cla

To eliminate three general education classes, students are venturing out of the classroom to participate in hands-on learning in the canyons of Utah County.

Honors natural science is offered to freshmen through honors and non-honors alike.

"I wish I knew about this class before I took my science GEs," said Chelsea Staffieri, 22, a senior, from Coto de Caza, Calif., majoring in business marketing.

The topics for the class range from ancient Greek studies to physics, Darwin, chemistry, biology and paradoxes in modern mathematics.

"This is a good class because it is not designed for science majors," said Heidi Matthews, 19, a sophomore from Trabuco Canyon, Calif.,majoring in English. "It's an intense course and it's definitely challenging, but it is nothing non-science majors can't handle."

Along with class lectures, the students participate in field trips. This past week they went on two geological field trips.

Tuesday the class was in Rock Canyon, where the students examined strata (a single layer of sedimentary rock) and two fault lines.

Saturday the class went on a trip down toward Price into San Rafael Swell, receiving hands-on experience in geological studies.

"There is more to see down there then we have time to in one day," professor William Dibble said.

The class also anticipates trips to the planetarium and visits to the campus' telescope. Unlike most classes, honors natural science is team taught by four professors.

"I like how they have multiple teachers, because they play off each other and are experts in their own field, so it makes the lectures interesting," said Drew Smith, 18, a freshman from Seattle, who has not declared a major.

By taking this class for the full two semesters, BYU students can complete their Physical Science 100, Biology 100 and the natural science elective.

The two-semester course is worth nine total credits, four during fall semester and five during winter semester. The homework involves reading over 10 text sources; 43 students this semester are enrolled in this class.

Cadets catch air at BYU in parachutes

By Nancy Craig Johanson
nancy@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

The weatherman called for clear skies, but it was raining cadets Saturday as BYU Army ROTC cadets jumped from UH-60 Blackhawk military helicopters. Suited in camouflages, cadets were able to test their jumping skills as they parachuted Hollywood style — no combat gear, only a parachute.

Operation Dumbo Drop was organized and executed by the Utah National Guard with the intent to give BYU, UVSC, U of U, SUU, Weber State and SLCC ROTC cadets the chance to test their skills and boost morale.

BYU cadets have been waiting for such an opportunity. Captain Erik H. Verhoef, assistant professor of military science at BYU, said all cadets jumping had to pass an airborne physical as well as airborne school — a three-week intensive training course. The safety of the cadets is first priority as seen by the ambulance and medical personnel on hand.

"Anytime we do training that's half-way dangerous, we'll make sure we have an ambulance," Verhoef said.

BYU cadet Brandon Stewart, 24, a student from Bluffdale, Salt Lake County, majoring in manufacturing engineering, attended airborne school about a year ago and has been waiting to do his first jump out of training.

"We came out here for fun, but there is still a serious aspect to it. It's possible that we could have to jump into a war zone," Stewart said.

Stewart said jumping out of helicopters builds a lot of confidence.

"When you're in the helicopter you're nervous, excited and your adrenaline is rushing; then when you jump out, you feel like you can do anything. It's dangerous, but if you do everything right it's pretty safe," Stewart said.

Cadet Jeff Holdaway, 25, a second year law student from Los Angeles, also went through the U.S. Army airborne course, and did his sixth jump Saturday.

"The view from up there is magnificent. It's one of the most serene situations you could ever be in. After you jump there's pure quiet and you can see everything as you ride the breeze. It's beautiful," Holdaway said.

Holdaway said he enjoys the fun perks the army affords him such as parachuting out of helicopters, but he said there's a lot more to the army than that.

"Being in the military means you're willing to sacrifice; that you will put someone else's needs in front of your own and give up some of the things you want in order to serve someone else.."

Credit card debt weighs on students

By Ashlee LeSueur
ashlee@newsroom.byu.edu
Campus Editor

It seems like once a week offers for amazing credit cards promising no annual fees and low monthly payments arrive in each BYU mailbox.

Seventy-seven percent of undergraduates at four-year colleges and universities have credit cards, according to data compiled by Consolidated Credit Counseling Services, Inc., a company that helps students with serious debt.

Credit card companies are not worrying about reversing the trend. And at college campuses they solicit hard — trying to trap a generally conscientious and high-spending population while they are young.

"There's a lot of money to be made, and credit card companies know it," said CCCS President Howard Dvorkin.

Credit card companies, wooing campuses across the country struggling with budget problems, offer to pay for everything from mentoring programs to lecture series and cap and gown rentals.

The bank asks only for rights to market their credit cards on campus, and the institution gets up to 0.05 percent of every transaction and often a $5-$20 bonus payment for each new account.

The bank creates a credit card with the logo or mascot of the school on it, and students are enticed by the "low-monthly-payments" chant and also the urgings to show school spirit.

According to the Consumer Federation Study, debt among college students has almost tripled since 1990.

BYU, however, has kept quite distant from this sweeping trend. The Alumni Association, obeying decisions made directly by the Board of Trustees, does not allow any card company to make credit cards showing BYU affiliation in any way.

In the face of all this, student credit card debt is mounting, due primarily to aggressive marketing and students' lack of credit knowledge.

Exploding student debt on American campuses is having wide-ranging but little-noticed social effects that are being felt in family relationships in young people's attitudes toward their peers and their school, and in their views about borrowing and saving.

According to studies done at CardWeb.com, Inc., a credit-card tracking service, students keep their first credit card for an average of 15 years.

"If it's the first card you get, chances are that you'll hang on to it for a long time," said Robert B. McKinley, CEO of Card Web.

But the loyalty that first-time cardholders offer is only one in a long list of general characteristics enticing major card companies to college campuses.

Credit-hungry students are often card issuers' best customers, despite the fact that most don't have a credit history or even a job.

Seventy percent of students with cards at four-year colleges have $2,000 or more of revolving debt, according to the Consumer Federation.

And ironically, students are less of a credit risk than the general population because their parents often pay the bills.

Credit card debt is a growing problem among the nation's college student population. S… percent of students with credit cards at four-year universities have $2,000 or more of debt.

In a new book called Credit Card Nation: The Consequences of America's Addiction to Debt, Robert D. Manning, a sociology professor at Georgetown, discusses the societal toll that the search of the good life marketed by credit card companies has on the young and the elderly.

Part of the book was written from facts found in his 1999 report that exposed the damage of credit cards on college campuses and the social costs of student debt.

"Clearly, credit and debt are shaping today's college experience," Manning said. "And thus shaping the future lives and attitudes of students."

Manning's report found that even students raised in homes where financial independence was taught find ways to justify the overuse of credit cards.

The college experience itself makes debt acceptable, Manning said. Students, who could never afford a college education without borrowing, decide that a good education is an asset worth the risk of long-term debt.

BYU professor takes on facts of life in his new boo…

Conception, puberty and sexual harassment are topics addressed in a new book by BYU professor Brad Wilcox.

His book "Growing Up: Gospel Answers about Maturation and Sex" addresses sensitive issues in a perspective from a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saint.

Wilcox said he was nervous about his manuscript going before the Deseret Book board, but it came back with a unanimous vote in favor of it.

Wilcox said many church leaders wished they had had a book like this when their children were young.

He said church publishers realize the need for books of this nature and are ready to meet that need.

He said he felt it was time for a book that gave the facts of life from a LDS perspective.

An advantage of Wilcox's book is that it is written for children ages 10 to 15.

Wilcox said he had his teen-age children look over the manuscript to make sure it was easy to read.

Wilcox said his book would give kids the right information at the right time in preparation for the right choices.

Wilcox has gotten feedback from parents who are grateful for a conversation starter on such a sensitive subject.

Wilcox said the word he has heard most from adults is "finally."

"I've heard that from so many parents. They are just grateful to have something they can actually use," Wilcox said.

Wilcox's book is selling well. At the BYU Bookstore, the book was popular during Education Week, said Julianne Brooks, religious book buyer.

Jessica Hansen, 20, a junior from New Orleans, majoring in elementary education, said she thinks an advantage of the book is that it is written by a church member and has a gospel slant.

"It could be a good resource for parents who are uncomfortable talking about sex with their children," she said.

Hansen said she would buy this type of book when she becomes a parent.

was thrown out of a fourth floor window. He established the China Disabled Persons' Federation in 1988, and has served as the chairman since then, according to a news release.

Johnson said most of the orphans are girls because it is important for the Chinese to raise boys to carry on the family name.

The government regulations are another reason for the number of abandoned children.

"Parents are fined $700 for a second child — that's a years wage in many cases," Johnson said.

One of CASI's goals is to make the adoption process easier. The group members are hoping to submit changes for adoption laws, including a reduction in red tape, cost, paperwork and length of time. Members also want to raise the ceiling of adoptions, so all requests can be filled, she said.

She said the performance additionally gives the orphans opportunities they don't have in China.

"China loves BYU. Groups have gone there for years, and they've left a great impression," she said.

"China's premiere is making a big issue of them coming over. He wants to show a more softer, caring side to China. They want to show they have a softer, humane side," Johnson said.

Besides improving relations, Johnson hopes the tour will help the millions of disabled orphans in China.

"They're a very loving people. Their orphan problem has gotten away from them — and we want to help," she said.

Tickets are $8 or $6 with a BYU or student ID. The tickets are available at the Fine Arts Ticket Office, 378-4322.

Football fumbles against Falcons

Air Force wide Receiver Ryan Fleming goes up over BYU defensive back Dustin Staley for one of his two touchdown receptions Saturday. BYU lost 31-23 against the Falcons.

Colorado Springs, Colo. — Three turnovers stifled three Cougar drives in the fourth quarter and Air Force held on to defeat BYU 31-23 Saturday at Falcon Stadium.

Down the entire second half, the Cougars closed within 28-23 on kicker Owen Pochman's 43-yard field goal with 8:31 left in the fourth quarter.

BYU's defense forced the Falcons to punt, but on the next play, running back Brian McDonald fumbled the ball and Air Force recovered.

BYU again forced Air Force to punt, but on the punt return, Mike Rigell fumbled the ball and again Air Force recovered.

Following an Air Force field goal that pushed the lead to eight, BYU's last drive ended when quarterback Bret Engemann's pass was intercepted at the BYU 30-yard line with 2:10 left in the game, ending any hope of a Cougar rally.

"Turnovers were the difference. They killed us," head coach LaVell Edwards said. "We couldn't get anything going in the second half."

The Air Force defense held BYU to 86 yards of total offense in the second half. Engemann completed only seven of 20 passes in the second half, including the interception. He finished 18-of-40 for 235 yards and one touchdown.

"I still can't figure it out. It hurts, but I'm not going to make any excuses," Engemann said. "They've got a touch group of kids. Hats off to them."

The Cougars ran for 125 yards in the game, but only 32 of those came after halftime. McDonald led the team with 89 yards.

"We came out flat as pancakes in the second half," said offensive coordinator Lance Reynolds.

Air Force quarterback Mike Thiessen completed 11 of 16 passes for 203 yards and four touchdowns, and the Falcon's offense gained 389 total yards and committed no turnovers.

"We were ready. We knew what they were going to do," said middle linebacker Justin Ena. "This should have been another step forward, but we have no excuses."

The Cougars have five days to get ready for Mississippi State Thursday in Cougar Stadium.

Air Force launchi air attack against

Colorado Springs, Colo. — Something must have been in the water ... er, in the air at Colorado Springs.

Air Force unleashed an air attack of four touchdown passes Saturday that caught BYU off guard and earned the Falcons a 31-23 victory.

In other words; footballs flew from the hands of Falcon QB Mike Thiessen more frequently than the Air Force Academy aircraft fly-bys.

It was a type of pigskin the Falcons hadn't seen in 28 years when they last scored four TDs on passing in 1972 — unheard of, considering those TDs came from a squad famous for its triple-option run.

Just one week earlier, Air Force erupted for 698 total yards — 563 on the ground — in a 49-point thrashing over Cal State Northridge.

"Their (the Falcons') scheme was a lot different than t we saw last week," said offensive coordinator Reynolds. "That poses so ferent challenges for us."

But while ground work Falcons' specialty in the game of the season, it ce wasn't in their second. Ai racked up 203 passing (BYU had 235) in 16 attem

Though the feat may n so laudable for most Div teams, a completed pass end zone at Air Force is as a four-leaf clover.

Thiessen had not fou endzone more than once career as QB before Saturd

But the Cougars say th it coming all the way.

"We were ready for it (plays), we practiced fo week," said linebacker Ena.

"They had a play-action and did a great job execut BYU coach LaVell Edward

Cougs upset NCAA No. 1 and 2 teams

By Brian Hintze
brian@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

The BYU women's volleyball team swept the Mizuno Classic and upset the No. 1 and No. 2 teams Stanford and Long Beach State in championship fashion last weekend in the Smith Fieldhouse.

The Cougars defeated No. 2 Long Beach State Saturday night 15-17,12-15, 15-13, 15-1 and 15-6 after a huge victory over Stanford on Friday.

The Cougars had their backs against the wall, down 2-0 in the match and 5-9 in the third game against Long Beach State.

Then things began to happen.

Scoring 10 of the next 14 points, BYU ripped game three out from under the 49ers.

While just barely keeping their head above water in games one, two, and three, BYU emerged in the final two games.

In the fourth game, the Cougars took command of the scoring and the match by jumping out to a 9-0 start.

Lead by the serving and net play of tournament MVP Nina Puikkonen, the Cougars finished the fifth game and the match with a 15-6 victory.

Puikkonen ended the match with 25 kills, four service aces and 12 digs.

"I think this had to be a career night for Nina," coach Elaine Michaelis said.

Natalie Whittaker and Sunny Tonga also played a significant role in the win, with Tonga contributing 21 kills, a .487 attack percentage and five digs in the victory.

Friday night the Cougars beat Stanford in a convincing fashion, 15-9, 13-15, 15-6 and 15-8.

"Stanford has tradition," Michaelis said. "They are always at the top. A win over Stanford is just great. It doesn't happen too often to too many people."

With the match tied at 1-1, BYU came out of the break on fire.

All-tournament selection Jackie Bundy led the Cougar's third game charge with seven kills.

Puikkonen's seven kills and Tonga's eight finished off the Cardinals in the fourth game and the match.

Freshman setter Karina Puikkonen had seven kills, a .357 hitting percentage, 11 digs, and 56 assists in the match.

"I think BYU is a very good team. They are tough to contain because they have five good hitters," said Stanford head coach Denise Corlett. "If you focus on one, another one comes right around the corner."

"They are legitimate contenders (for the national championship) if they stay healthy."

BYU also defeated Fairfield Saturday afternoon 15-9, 15-4 and 15-3.

With the wins, the Cougars extended their record to 5-1.

Bookmobile open to all residents in the county

By Marcy Swan
marcy@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

The Utah County bookmobile is a traveling library anyone can use.

A division of the Utah State Library system is the Utah County bookmobile, which is funded through state and county dollars.

There are no cards to carry or fees to pay; just register name and address at the bookmobile or its home base in Mapleton.

The bookmobile is not called mobile for nothing.

Bookmobile technician Ellen Starr said it travels to locations on a two-week rotating schedule. The 22 sites include towns from Benjamin to Genola, and Palmyra to Cedar Valley.

The stops last from 30 minutes to half a day, Monday through Thursday.

The bookmobile can usually be found in the local church or elementary school parking lot, Starr said.

The mobile library has over 40,000 titles. Last year it received an award for the best collection of books of any of the 13 bookmobiles in the state.

Starr said it is a "reading library" with research materials limited to elementary age level.

An average of 500 books are checked out each day and replenished from the selection in the Mapleton center, Ed Walker, bookmobile librarian, said.

"The biggest misconception is that a bookmobile is just for children. That is just not true. We carry books for all ages," Walker said. "We carry the cream of the crop, the most popular and highly reviewed books."

When asked how many Harry Potter books he has, Walker said, "Five of each one, about 496 too few."

Walker said he limits copies of books to five to keep a wide variety of titles.

"If the author is popular, we carry all of their books," Walker said.

The bookmobile carries fiction, non-fiction, fantasy, science fiction, a large selection of self-help books and classics, Walker said.

Literature not available locally may be ordered through the interlibrary loan service from the state library.

"We can get any book that is not on the rare book list," Walker said.

The bookmobile operates on a budget of $100,000 with 90 percent of the funds coming from county general funds.

Cities that use the traveling unit pay the county according to the length of time it is there. The Utah State Library pays 10 percent, Walker said.

The bookmobile was allotted $13,500 to purchase inventory this year, Starr said.

To put that amount in perspective, Provo City Library allotted $60,000 for books from their $1.83 million budget, said Provo Library executive assistant Terry Ann Harward.

The city of Mapleton trades the benefit of the library service for free rent of the building and utilities. The county's commissioners and library personnel have expressed a desire to have an integrated county library system, similar to others in the state.

This program would allow all residents to check out books from any library in the county. An agreement has not been reached to make this possible.

Residents who do not live within city boundaries of the county must pay a fee to use the local city library. The fee range from $25 to $50 a year. The Mapleton location, 305 N. Main, is open Monday through Friday with varying hours.

Live talk show returns to BYU

By Jessica Kehr
jessica@newsroom.byu.edu
Associate Special Sections Editor

The dancing Sandman, a bicycle-riding host and live chickens are only a few of the tactics used by the "Off the Record" crew to pull an audience in last year.

The format is that of a late-night talk show with a monologue, guests and live bands, said Jake Ball, host of the show.

"It's going to be a rip-snorting good time," Ball said.

The show was Ball's idea. He has hosted Soapbox on campus, which is designed as a forum for students to have an intellectual debate or an outlet to voice their opinions.

Ball found, that students were using the venue to entertain each other. As a result "Off the Record" was created.

"This show could have a legitimate impact at BYU," said Kevin Mumford, Executive Director of Campus Activities. "Something just as familiar as other BYU activities."

A 35-person crew was selected to help write, produce and perform the show this year.

"I like working with people and making people laugh" said Glen Ruche, the shows official 'go to man' in charge.

This year is different as well. Instead of only three shows like last year, "Off the Record" will perform every other Wednesday.

Ball said that the focus of the show is to showcase BYU talent.

"There's so much talent and great people here," Ball said.

A different local band will perform every week on "Off the Record."

"I guarantee that it will be the most entertaining thing that you can do with your afternoon," Ball said.

Ruche is also in charge of scheduling the guests on the show. His goal is to get people who bring interest to BYU. These would be LDS celebrities, role models and other interesting and fun people in Utah.

Some of the names on the list that the show would like to have come are Steve Young, the Osmonds and Robert Redford, said Rusche.

Last year the show hosted Peter Brienhoft, three of BYU's basketball players and a LDS comedy couple, the Abbots.

The show will run every other Wednesday in the Varsity Theater at 1 p.m. starting on Sept. 13, 2000.

Free tickets will be distributed on campus and door prizes will be given based on the tickets.

Athletic competition reins in Intramural sports

By Rachel Gardner
gardner@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

With fall beginning, students sign up for classes, bank accounts and health insurance. But what about recreation?

Adam Anthony, 22, a junior from Brea, Calif., majoring in zoology, participates in intramural soccer, volleyball, basketball and indoor soccer.

"Some come to BYU to find an eternal companion, others to further their education – the real prize of the university, however, is the opportunity to play intramural sports," Anthony said.

BYU offers intramural sports for students, spouses and visitors to participate in athletic competition.

Each sport is offered in specified seasons and the sports range from flag football to ultimate Frisbee.

Volleyball is one of 20 intramural activities offered during fall semester.

BYU Male Services is not an escort service, but a BYU intramural volleyball team. The 10-player team is the 1999 division 2A champions, and this year they defend their title under a team name, New Harlem.

Like most intramural teams, these men compete through a grueling five-game season to earn their place in a tournament where in double elimination, they fight to bring home the winning T-shirt in the final championship game.

The team is led by Captain Jared Wall, 22, a junior from San Clemente, Calif., majoring in human biology.

"Wanna-be jocks are serious about it, but not us – we do it for fun," Wall said.

New Harlem is just one of 72 teams vying for the 2000 championship.

Teams are created by wards, groups of friends or by randomly signing up to join a team. When the teams are first bought, the purchaser chooses what league the team will play.

"We organize our teams into leagues and there are six teams in a league. Then we divide into divisions by ability for the tournament," said six-year Associate Director of Intramural Sports Phil Kelly.

The cost of intramural sports is $20 per team, and the fee goes to the intramural budget, which helps pay wages for supervisors and officials and for sports equipment. Contracts are limited in number and dates vary when contracts go on sale.

While some participants choose to join an intramural team, others who do not want to play can support teams or even referee the games.

"I myself have never played intramural sports, but I have watched a few games and it seems like a good opportunity for high school athletes to compete again," said Lisanne Erickson, 20, a junior from Dallas, Texas, majoring in community health.

There is an intramural sport to be found five nights a week, giving many students a chance to make friends and play sports.

Students express opinions on Soapbox

By Michelle Lewis Aller
michellel@newsroom.byu.edu
Special Sections Editor

Between 11:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m. on Mondays, students can step up to a microphone and express their opinions to a crowd of their peers – all on a small wooden crate called the Soapbox.

"The Soapbox is a valuable outlet for students. I'm not sure if it helps students resolve their issues, but it's a great idea," said John Bennion, BYUSA Student Advisory Council vice president.

The Soapbox has not always been the way it is. Jake Ball, 24, a senior from Boise, Idaho, majoring in global trade, is the program director of the Soapbox and started to change it two years ago.

"It existed before, but was very weak. I get topics now and try to get students to discuss how they feel about them," Ball said.

Students are invited by Ball to grab the microphone and vent their feelings to a large crowd.

There are two restrictions, however to the Soapbox.

"No foul language and no speaking against doctrines or leaders of any church," Ball said.

BYU students have mixed feelings about the Soapbox.

"I like it because it gives people a way to express themselves in an orderly manner," said Rachel Haines, 20, a junior from Sandy, Salt Lake County, majoring in art therapy.

David Sattler, 24, a junior from Allentown, Pa., majoring in law and diplomacy, watches and listens to the Soapbox.

"It's great. If it's something that I'm wondering about, I'll stop and listen," Sattler said

Other students like the Soapbox if it's amusing or interesting to them.

"I love the Soapbox! It's a good place to see how sheltered BYU really is. It's also funny to listen to," said Ryan McDonald, 24, a senior from Lake Tahoe, Calif., majoring in human biology.

Not all students agree with Haines, Sattler or McDonald. Some students think the soapbox can be annoying.

"It bugs me a lot, especially when people get up there and have no idea what they are talking about. If you go up there, know what they are talking about," said Jeremy Blackwell, 22, a junior from Roosevelt, Duchesne County, majoring in construction management.

Other students are annoyed with the Soapbox because of repeated speakers and issues.

"It's a good thing but sometimes they should limit the people who go up there. Sometimes the same people just go up there," said Melinda Goodrich, 19, a sophomore from Kent, Wash., who has not declared a major.

Ball realizes there are students who abuse or do not take the Soapbox seriously.

"I'd like to keep it focused on important topics – stuff that matters – but students are welcome to speak freeform," Ball said.

Although there are restrictions with the Soapbox, Ball insists the rules are there to give freedom.

"There are minimal restrictions for maximum freedom. I always say when I'm up there that, 'with every ounce of freedom, there's a pound of responsibility,'" Ball said.

The Soapbox is outside at Brigham's Square, the area between the Harris Fine Arts Center, the Harold B. Lee Library and the Wilkinson Student Center.

Y to get involved this week

By Rachael Wilson
wilson@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

What week is traditionally associated with overeager freshmen, impassable walkways and environmentally unfriendly propaganda?

Y Days of course, or as most students refer to the campus's recruitment meat-market, Involvement Week.

Y Days, sponsored by BYUSA, is a week of service opportunities, club information booths and fun activities to get students excited about the new school year.

Y Days are Monday through Friday. Booths will be set up in the Wilkinson Student Center, the Wilky Way, and Brigham Square from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Service activities will occur throughout the week, and will be advertised through flyers, posters and at the various clubs' booths.

Trevor Davis, BYUSA vice president of university relations, said that combining Involvement Week with Y Days will promote getting involved.

"We want to encourage students to become involved in clubs and service," Davis said.

Davis said Y Days follows President Bateman's desire for students to be a part of BYU, not to just go to BYU.

"I love the idea that we are all a part of BYU. If this is a Zion university then we should all do our part to make a contribution," Davis said.

> "We want to encourage students to become involved in clubs and service."
> — Trevor Davis, BYUSA VP of University Relations

Y Days has "a lot of offerings of clubs and service programs located in one place, so students can have a one-spot of involvement opportunities," said Rachel Welton, BYUSA vice president of public relations.

Welton said that the process of becoming involved is simple.

"BYUSA has created a method where the interested student fills out an involvement card, turns it into BYUSA and is then contacted within two weeks of signing up by the area specified on the card within BYUSA," Welton said.

For the most part, students look favorably on the week's involvement outreach.

"We have a give and take relationship between us and the university. We are going to get out of it what we put into it," said Mike Wirrick, 23, senior from Bellevue, Wash., majoring in psychology.

Ryan Jensen, 24, a senior from Kaysville, Davis County, majoring in international business, agrees.

"Nothing is more rewarding than giving back to the university. We live in a society of take, take, take. It is nice to see opportunities to give," Jensen said.

Wirrick and Jensen's optimistic outlook is not shared by all students. Jon Wood, 23, a junior from Farmington, Davis County, majoring in international development, has a different view on Y Day's purpose.

"I feel harassed. They just want my involvement, they don't care about me," Wood said.

Like it or not, there is no avoiding Y Days. It will be hitting campus this week with a plethora of involvement and service opportunities.

Who, What, Where, When & Y

Who: Every student at BYU has the opportunity to be involved in clubs chartered by BYUSA or by individual departments.

What: Y Days is a chance for students to meet with officials to discuss details about their clubs.

Where: Clubs will line the quad area between the south end of the library and the bookstore.

When: Monday through Friday

Y: Many students are not aware of the specialty clubs that could pump up their resumes, give them the chance to serve people in their community and use their talents.

BYU provides a club for all students

By: Meredith Young
young@newsroom.byu.edu
Associate Special Sections Editor

Storytelling, Sailing, Collectable Card Games and Kickboxing Aerobics – BYU has clubs to fit every profile on campus.

Amanda Ainge, the executive director of special interest and service clubs for BYUSA, said many of the clubs are not yet official this year because everybody is coming through the approval process.

"We are open to all types of clubs, as long as they fit with BYU's aims. We'd love to have as many clubs as possible," Ainge said.

One club that is increasing in size as well as improving individual statures, is the Kickboxing Aerobics Club.

Eric Scherer, 24, a junior from Serasota, Fla., majoring in computer science, is the president of the club, which started two years ago.

Over 100 followers flock to the free Tuesday and Thursday sessions in the Wilkinson Student Center at 8 p.m.

However, due to the buildings' changing schedules, students are e-mailed the week's schedule.

Scherer has been learning martial arts since he was four years old. The weekly routine changes, but includes Cardio Kick, as well as several self-defense moves at the end of class. Scherer said he does this so that by the end of the semester, people have a variety of moves.

"I do the Kickboxing aerobics, so they are learning real Tae Kwon Doe."

Wondering how many males attend the event? Scherer said, 10 out of 100 people.

"If a guy wanted to get a date, that (class) is the place to go," Scherer said.

During Y Days, the club will have a booth with a sign-up sheet. There is no fee involved.

Other clubs include the Storytelling Club; Y Rocks, a rock climbing club; and the Hip-Hop Dance Club, which will teach different moves each week from various groups including the Backstreet Boys.

Y Days provide an opportunity to speak with members of different clubs on campus, and sign up for those that are interesting or appealing.

HFAC houses free performances

By Julia Leaman
leaman@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

From choir concerts and faculty band ensembles, to senior recitals and songwriter showcases, the Harris Fine Arts Center houses a variety of free musical concerts.

The first of the free concerts is Oct. 26 with the Orpheus Winds in the Madsen Recital Hall.

Another free performance is the Symphonic Band, performing Nov. 11. It is made up of 90 wind and percussion instrumentalists, who perform a variety of symphonic pieces from American, British and Russian composers.

The second to last free concerts is Q'd Up on Dec. 6, a faculty jazz quintet performing original compositions, as well as arrangements of jazz standards, from bee-bop to funk.

There are 14 free musical concerts scheduled in the HFAC for fall semester.

Many students, freshmen and seniors alike, are unaware that the HFAC offers free concerts and plays to students and the public throughout the year.

"I think a lot of people don't know about it from what I've found," said Kerry McKnight, a junior from Fallon, Nev., majoring in marriage family human development.

Another free highlight in the HFAC is the Mask Club.

The club features student actors and directors in different one-act plays on Thursdays. Performance times are 1 p.m., 2 p.m. and 4 p.m.

The first Mask Club production was Sept. 7, "The Complete Works of William Shakespeare, Abridged" and the production this Thursday is "Oleana."

Following each of the productions is a question and answer session, where the audience and participants may offer comments and constructive criticism.

Evaluating what went well and what can be improved on usually gives the audience a good theatrical experience, said David Mellinger, a graduate student in theater and media arts from Layton, Davis County.

For information regarding free performances in the HFAC, call the box office at 801-378-4322. If anyone is interested in auditioning for one of the productions, watch for audition notices posted on the bulletin board outside the Nelke Experimental Theater in the HFAC, or call Faculty Director Rodger Sorenson at 801-378-8132.

Web just another way to get involved at Y

By Michelle Lewis Aller

For students who ignore posters, flyers and announcements about how to be involved at BYU, there are Web sites available for just that purpose.

BYUSA sponsors The Hub – a Web site at hub.byu.edu that gives information about activities and events on campus.

"Created for students by students," The Hub's official launch of the site was Aug. 28.

The site allows visitors to view calendars, search for activities under topics such as "arts" or "services" and gives links to organizations on campus.

The creator of The Hub is Matthew Jaynes, 24, a junior from Heidelberg, Germany, majoring in economics.

"The first purpose of the site is for students to have a resource to find out what is going on all the time," Jaynes said.

The other purposes of the Hub is to provide services for students on the Web site and to give a creative venue for students, Jaynes said.

The Hub is not the only resource on-line providing students methods of involvement.

NewsNet, at newsnet.byu.edu, offers a Web site with news about BYU, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and Utah.

The Daily Universe, the paper you are reading at this very moment in case you were wondering, is a division of NewsNet – a news service combining The Daily Universe, KBYU-TV, FM News and CCN News.

Visitors can explore news articles, vote for online polls, read archive articles and email reporters and editors their comments.

"NewsNet is a spectacular site for BYU students, and everyone interested in BYU, to gain up-to-date, accurate information about BYU and its students," said John Gholdston, managing director of NewsNet.

Students are not the only visitors to newsnet.byu.edu. Alumni, LDS Church members and anyone interested in BYU visits the award-winning Web site.

"NewsNet received 11.5 million hits Winter 2000," said Michael Buhrley, web director of NewsNet.

BYU's own Web site at www.byu.edu also provides information students can use to get involved.

"Whenever I want to know what is going on, I look at the BYU Web site. Then I can click on links to find out about games and activities," said Brooke Misseldine, 21, a senior from Reno, Nev., majoring in dietetics.

Students can find information on a variety of interests from sports to forums.

By clicking on the 'student' icon on the main page, students can find additional information catered to the BYU student body.

Services, social, academics and financial are all headings in the 'student' area of the BYU Web site to get information from.

Students can also jump on any kiosk around BYU to discover activities on campus. On the kiosks' main menu is a small box for Student Life.

Visitors who click on the Student Life icon can learn about events and activities all over campus.

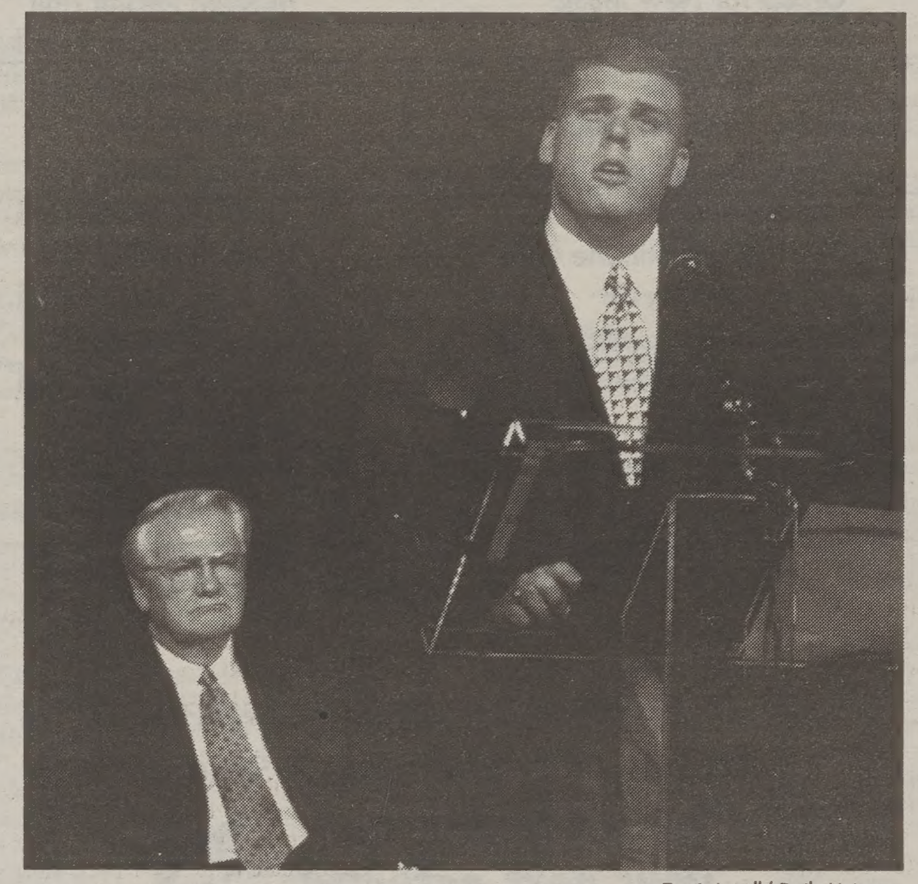
Brady and Sandberg 'connect' with students



Travis Lovell/ Daily Universe
BYUSA President Bill Bradly addresses the student body at Devotional.

If a student wanders into the BYUSA offices, they will hear a lot about being connected.

Helping students connect with opportunities, activities and other students on campus is the main goal of BYUSA President Bill Brady and Executive Vice President Sarah Sandberg.

When they ran for office more than four months ago, Brady and Sandberg's campaign slogan was "get connected, be connected, stay connected."

This goal remains the primary focus of the Brady-Sandberg administration, Sandberg said.

One of President Bateman's major concerns is that many students never really develop a sense of belonging to BYU through extracurricular or co-curricular activities, and a primary goal is to help fix this problem, Brady said.

Brady said he believes students who involve themselves in extra-curricular activities, like BYUSA, discover the sense of accomplishment that comes from making a meaningful contribution to something bigger than they are.

"Those students that get involved have a richer experience," Sandberg said. "Platforms and programs fade, but the experiences people have are what they cherish."

Both Brady and Sandberg feel that the people they meet through their BYUSA responsibilities are the best part of their jobs.

They have worked hard to open more forums for involvement and discussion on issues that are important to BYU students, Brady said.

Over the summer, Brady and Sandberg cooperated with Utah Transit Authority to incorporate more convenient bus routes for students, even discussing the possibility of instituting a semester bus pass.

Brady said involvement with UTA, the Provo City planners on SCAMP and the expansion of The Hub Web site at hub.byu.edu, are three major accomplishments of his administration so far.

Both Brady and Sandberg help inspire students who volunteer for BYUSA, said Sarah Jensen, BYUSA executive director of campus activities.

"Bill is a very eloquent speaker, but Sarah does a lot behind the scenes. She's a great leader," Jensen said.

Kevin Mumford, also the BYUSA executive director of campus activities promises that students who become involved in areas like campus activities will find they enjoy BYU much more than they did before.

"I feel much more part of BYU," Mumford said.

Both Mumford and Jensen respect and strongly support Brady and Sandberg's goal of being connected.

Students can contact Brady, Sandberg and the volunteers at the BYUSA offices at 3400 Wilkinson Student Center.

BYUSA equals service

By Michelle Lewis Aller
michellel@newsroom.byu.edu

BYUSA – a name heard and seen all around campus. So what is BYUSA?

"It's an organization of students that represent the student body," said Chelsea Williams, 19, a sophomore from Orange, Calif., majoring in nursing.

Founded in 1988 by a collaborative effort of students, staff members and BYU President Jeffrey R. Holland, BYUSA is the acronym for Brigham Young University Student Service Association.

According to the BYUSA charter, BYUSA replaced the former student association ASBYU to "phase out some of the conflicts and power struggles associated with conventional student governments."

"BYUSA is the main student organization on the BYU campus. It provides the students that serve in BYUSA with opportunities to make a contribution to the campus, while providing numerous activities, programs and club opportunities for the entire student body," said BYUSA President Bill Brady.

Rachel Welton, 20, a junior from Stockton, Calif., majoring in English, is the vice president of public relations for BYUSA.

"BYUSA is an association that gives students an opportunity to serve and give back to BYU," Welton said.

BYUSA is the backbone of most clubs and organizations on campus. The association also produces activities like the Fall Fling and provides service opportunities for students.

Wendi Conkey, 22, a junior from Bloomfield, Colo., majoring in art education, is a volunteer at BYUSA.

"I thought it would be a great way to get an experience and serve," Conkey said.

Welton said any student can serve who wants to.

"There are thousands of opportunities to get involved. If someone wants to get involved, they can," Welton said.

With students' hectic schedules, students with little time commitments can even serve.

"Whether people can volunteer one hour every other week or five hours a week, we can find somewhere they can serve," Welton said.

BYUSA is led by a student body president and executive vice president. There are seven vice presidents who are assigned over areas, and there are executive directors within those areas to assist the vice presidents.

The seven areas with vice presidents are campus activities, campus organizations, community service, design and technology, public relations, student advisory council and the university student council.

BYUSA is not alone. David Lucero, assistant director of student leadership, supervises BYUSA and reports to the dean of students. The dean answers to the the Vice President of Student Life, Janet Scharmann, who reports to President Bateman.

"We exist to give students an opportunity to contribute to BYU and create talents," Welton said.

Students interested in BYUSA can contact their office at 801-378-3901. The BYUSA office is 3400 WSC.

SAC helps students get voices heard

By Christijan Draper
christijan@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Have you had that dream? The one in which you shout and shriek but no one can hear you? Maybe you are in a glass box and no matter how much racket you make, no one gives heed.

Some students at BYU feel their voices can't be heard – or won't be listened to – by administrators. But, John Bennion, BYUSA Student Advisory Council vice president, believes otherwise.

"I feel that a lot of people have passionate feelings about an issue but never get involved," Bennion said. "I think students dig their own hole there."

Bennion said that the current administrators, especially President Merrill J. Bateman, have shown a willingness to listen to students.

"President Bateman has students sit in on every applicable university committee," Bennion said.

The Student Advisory Council or SAC was established in 1988 to facilitate communication between students and administration.

SAC, which meets throughout fall and winter semesters, consists of 39 students representing each college, academic division and special interest group on campus, Bennion said.

David Lucero, Assistant Director of Student Leadership at BYU, involved with SAC for ten years, said that the purpose of SAC is two-fold.

"[SAC] gives students an opportunity, a means of getting an educated, well-thought-out voice to administrators."

It is also, by that voice, a way to make positive changes at BYU, Lucero said.

Clark Pingree, 24, a senior from Salt Lake City, majoring in finance, served as a representative of the Marriott School of Management to SAC last year.

He said SAC is "the most accessible way that students can voice their needs and wants."

Some of the council's accomplishments students may not associate with SAC.

Courtesy phones, baby-changing stations in men's restrooms and the policy allowing for shorts on campus all came about largely due to SAC's involvement, Bennion said.

More noticeable SAC projects are the weekly Soapbox outside of the Wilkinson Student Center, town meetings and the voter registration rally, Bennion said.

Pingree said SAC is seen by the administration as an advisory council. Pingree also said that a common frustration among council members was that SAC had no power to initiate and facilitate change.

SAC acts somewhat like a congress for BYU students, said Pingree.

Students can find their representative by contacting their college or the SAC office directly at 378-7181.

Student starts a club

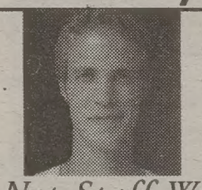
By Jared Meyer
jared@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Free candy – that's what I thought BYU clubs were all about.

Clubs use candy, music and cute girls to entice students to their booths. In the past week, I have learned that club have more to offer than cheap candy.

At first glance, it appears that there is a club for everyone, but I know there are people out there, like myself, whose tastes are so unique that no existing clubs spark their interest.

jared meyer



NewsNet Staff Writer

Students with this predicament can start their own club. Here's how to start:

First decide what your club will be about.

If I were to form a club, it would be about my favorite thing, creative dating. What can I say? I am an original.

The next step in forming a club is to decide the name and choose a president.

After many weeks of pondering, I chose to name my club the "Creative Dating Club," with myself as the president.

According to the BYUSA Clubs and Organizations Registration Packet, clubs should be centered around the following objectives:

1. Cultivate a sense of belonging
2. Refine skills and talents
3. Divine centered leadership
4. Meaningful contributions
5. A commitment to future service

Every club requires an advisor; any full-time BYU employee, faculty, staff, or personnel can be a club adviser. The adviser must take an active role in the club and is responsible for upholding university standards.

The adviser and president need to appoint or elect club officers – a treasurer, secretary, and United Club Council Representative.

Every club needs a charter – something that defines the mission and purpose of the club.

For example, the charter for the Creative Dating Club includes, "The goal of this club is to provide students with innovative ideas to win the hearts of anyone they date – without injury."

The charter needs to outline duties of officers, requirements for membership, the role of the adviser and methods for amending the charter.

Once the charter has been written, the president should turn in the registration packet and schedule a 30-minute orientation and training schedule with an assigned BYUSA executive director.

Then, the charter is reviewed to ensure that it is consistent with BYU standards (my charter is appropriate – see Genesis 2:24).

If the club has been approved, the president and advisor are notified and the search for members begins.

If students want to start their own clubs, they need to visit the BYUSA offices in 3400 Wilkinson Student Center, to pick up a registration packet.
